Zambia's iconic 3,497 sq. mi (9,059 sq. km) South Luangwa National Park in the secluded Luangwa Valley is one of Africa's unspoilt wilderness regions with great wildlife experiences. In fact, it is here that the African walking safari was pioneered. The area around the Luangwa River and its oxbow lagoons hold some of the highest concentrations of wildlife in Africa—60 different animal species and more than 400 different bird species. The Luangwa River is the life-blood of the park and Africa's most intact major river system. The park contains 39 birds of prey and 47 migrant bird species. Along with a variety of wildflowers, there are mopane, leadwood, winterthorn, tall vegetable ivory palm, marula, baobab, ebony and tamarind trees.

Mfuwe Lodge, just inside the main park gate, sits in the most prolific wildlife area of the park beneath a canopy of ebony and mahogany trees. A parade of wildlife visit the banks of its two lagoons. In November, local elephants regularly wander right through the lobby, lured by a nearby wild mango tree.

It's easy to take water for granted. Turn on a faucet, and there it is.

But in Africa, more than 345 million people do not have this luxury. In Zambia, Deeper Africa partners with The BushCamp Company in their efforts to drill and maintain boreholes in communities near their camps in the South Luangwa. Those boreholes provide safe clean drinking water to whole communities. When you travel with Deeper Africa, your safari includes a contribution to this work. In addition, you can visit a local village to see the borehole, meet villagers, and learn how it helps. Come with us and witness the enormous impact of clean water. Be part of this exciting work.
