Call of the Congo

DAY-BY-DAY ITINERARY

Primate viewing safari

At first, all you see is the deep green leaves towering over your head.

The jungle shudders with cracking wood and bending trees as something massive crashes your way. A silverback barges into the path and gives you a look. It could be Neptuno, a bold but friendly leader, or Jupiter, the strong silent type. Soon, you're surrounded by western lowland gorillas—one of two groups habituated to quiet, respectful human presence. Young mothers nuzzle babies. Bashful juveniles peek from the foliage while the more outgoing perform aerial acrobatics, glancing often to gauge your appreciation.

This is an adventure on foot through primeval landscapes few have seen. The joy of being here is deepened knowing that your visit helps save these magnificent creatures and their rainforest.

Ngaga Camp Odzala-Kokoua National Park

Sip hot coffee as neighboring gorillas rise from their nests and forage for breakfast. This is the best time to catch them—grazing on bamboo leaves, pith, shoots, bark and all the fruit they can find. A silverback, weighing up to 500 pounds, eats nothing but fruits and vegetables so foraging is serious business. Trackers, trained and coached by internationally prominent primatologists, scout the gorillas' last location. Head out in a group of four with a guide and a local tracker with 15 years experience. Upon finding the gorillas, you'll have one hour to stay with them. Beyond idle curiosity and amusement, humans are of little interest to gorillas. Step into their world and observe each gorilla's differing personality and behavior so similar to humans, but occurring in the vivid, green jungle.

Lango Camp Odzala-Kokoua National Park

From the room or the spacious deck at Lango Camp, enjoy the view out over the bai, a mineral-rich wetlands habitat. Relax with a cold drink as wildlife come down to feed. Wade this warm, clear water as buffalo graze and egrets hunt in the shallows, or kayak on a nearby stream for an intimate, eye-level look at the landscape when the water is high. If you're lucky, you may have to yield the right-of-way to a family of elephants crossing the stream, the matriarch clearly in charge and keeping a close eye on the youngest one.

Travelers come for the gorillas and fall in love with the rainforest and mosaic of ecosystems. Mboko Camp gives you a look at the vast savanna grasslands bordering the rainforest and offers a day on the water—or in it. Kayak through the leafy bends of the Likoli River or just wade in its warm, crystal clear waters. If you prefer to stay dry, a boat cruise is a perfect way to get great close-ups of the forest buffalo and elephants. Or take a forest walk through meadowland bordered by hanging vines, chattering monkeys and colorful birds. The open sky and unlit night are perfect stargazing.

Sabine Plattner African Charities (SPAC)

Odzala-Kokoua National Park, Republic of Congo

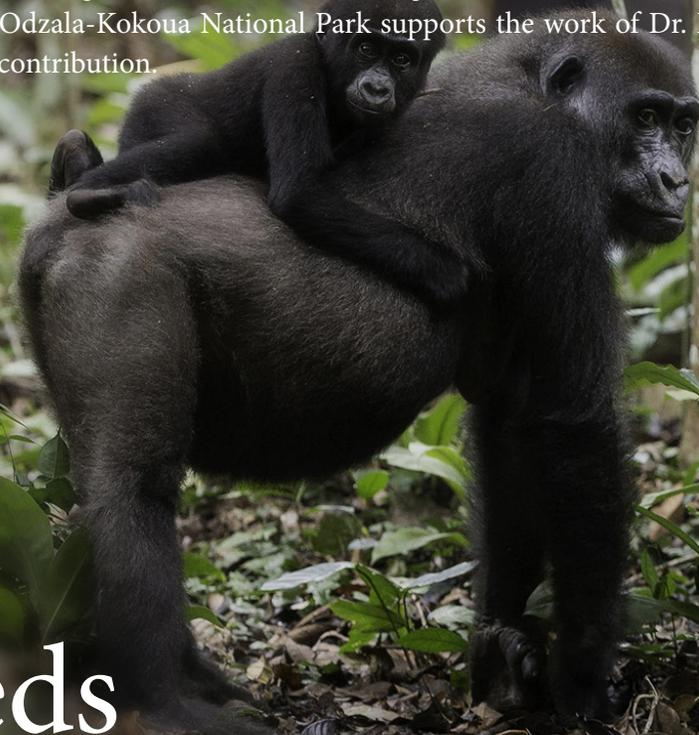

Ngaga Camp is the field headquarters for Dr. Magda Bermejo (the Dian Fossey of the Congo) and her husband, German Illera (University of Barcelona).

Thanks to their pioneering work, Ngaga has become one of Africa's most important gorilla trekking destinations. The two have been studying western lowland gorillas in northern Congo for more than 25 years—research that has habituated gorillas here and allowed tourism to help protect these animals and this unspoiled habitat. Western lowland gorillas are a critically endangered species.

Magda and German study human/gorilla interactions and resource sharing. With support from Sabine Plattner African Charities, they are developing community projects to enable and empower children, women and men in nearby villages living amongst the gorillas to the benefit of both people and gorillas. Ngaga Camp studies the effects of gorilla tourism on broader gorilla conservation in Congo and beyond. Each night of your stay in Odzala-Kokoua National Park supports the work of Dr. Bermejo and Illera with a per person financial contribution.
